Theater Panic in Village in Pennsylvania.

125 ARE INJURED

Women and Children Are Trampled to Death.

STAIRWAY IS BLOCKED

Jam at Narrow Exit Makes Entire Audience Helpless Victims, and in Fifteen Minutes the Building Is in Ashes—Moving Picture Entertainment at Boyertown, Berks County, Scene of Terrible Disaster—Reading and Pottstown Send Aid to the Stricken Community.

Reading, Pa., Jan. 13.—The borough of Boyertown, this county, was visited to-night by one of the greatest fire disasters in the history of Eastern Pennsylvania.

The entire borough is in mourning and 200 families had either a member killed or injured. The latest report says that 75 to 100 people are dead, while 125 more were hurt.

A moving-picture machine was recently installed in the opera house, a two-story building, and to-night an entertainment was given, under the auspices of Mrs. Monroe. The hall was packed. The majority were women and children.

While the scenery was being moved, a lamp was upset. This caused an explosion of a calcium machine, setting the flimsy stage material on fire. Instantly the audience was in a panic. All made for the doors.

Soon Enveloped in Flames.

Then there was a jam at the narrow exit. The scene beggars description. The front of the building was enveloped in flames.

Many were crushed to death in the narrow stairway. This was soon filled with corpses, and many were driven back by the terrible jam. These were met by a fierce blaze which overpowered the helpless people and they succumbed in quick succession.

The fire raged with the greatest fury and in ten minutes the entire building was a mass of flames.

Men and women and children were caught as in a trap, and perished as if they were so many flies. In a few minutes more the structure was a mass of flames, and every one who had not yet escaped was doomed. Some had jumped from the windows, and these were picked up by friends and carried away.

The fire in the opera house was beyond control from the instant that it started, and word was sent to Reading and Pottstown. The latter sent a fire engine, and doctors and nurses on a special train, but the services of the fire engine were mainly directed to saving neighboring property.

Building Soon in Ruins.

The building in which the entertainment was conducted was in ruins in fifteen minutes, and not a vestige is left but the blackened walls. It is estimated that three hundred people were in the place, and the majority of these were killed and injured. The scenes in the building are simply indescribable.

Some of the most prominent families in the town are bereft, and frantic parents rushed about the streets of the borough to-night, vainly looking for children, and others looking for husband or wife who perished in the building. The bodies of some were entirely consumed, and others were burned to a crisp.

The remains of some will never be found, and some are entirely unrecognizable. They were found wedged in the stairway, while those who could not get that far simply went down with the floor to a frightful death. Still others were mercifully suffocated before friends all their agonies.

Nurses Go to Scene.

At 11 o'clock to-night two cars filled with doctors and nurses from the hospitals of this city left over the Oley Valley Electric Railroad for the scene of the catastrophe. The distance is nineteen miles, and it will take one and a half hours to reach the town. It is not expected that the injured will be brought to this city before morning. One of the survivors, who escaped with a scorched face, said:

"It was as sudden as it was unexpected. The explosion, the stampede, the panic-stricken people wedged in the stairway, the cries of those in the rear, the dreadful smoke, the women and children overcome, the roaring flames, and then scores engulfed by the seething fire.

"It seems to me that it occurred all in a minute. It all took place in less than two minutes, of that I am sure. The terrible cries of the people fated to such a dreadful death I will never forget to my dying day. I should judge that the hall had a capacity of 400 people, and it was well filled."

Rhodes Opera House, where the fire occurred, was a two-story brick building. The first floor was occupied by a hardware store, and on the second was the entertainment hall.

Residents Are Well-to-do.

Boyertown has about 2,500 people. It is eight miles from Pottstown. It is located in Eastern Berks County, near the Montgomery County line, and is situated in the midst of a thriving agricultural

FOE OF CZAR ARRIVES

Milyoukov, Ablest Democrat in Russia, on Visit.

MAY CALL ON THE PRESIDENT

Leader of His Party in the Duma Will Come to Washington Tomorrow—Calls Emperor Nicholas a Weakling—Will Spend but a Few Days in This Country.

New York, Jan. 13.—Prof. Paul Milyoukov, the ablest of Russian Democrats, and leader of the right branch of the left wing of the third Duma, who arrived here this morning on the Cunard liner Carmania, has traveled eleven thousand miles to tell the American people all about the wrongs of Russia in one speech.

In this speech, which he will deliver to-morrow night, before the Civic Forum at Carnegie Hall, he will also discuss the remedy by which, in the opinion of his party, the Constitutional Democrats will ameliorate if not altogether wipe out the various horrible conditions under which the great masses of his countrymen are now eking out what he describes as an intolerable existence.

He will be the guest of honor Wednesday night at a banquet to be given by Herbert Parsons, in Washington, at which several members of the Cabinet and many Senators and Representatives will be present. Thursday he sails again toward Russia on the French steamer Lorraine.

Punishment Not Severe.

Although Mr. Milyoukov is said to be the author of the famous Viborg resolution, he blandly remarked that the punishment of the unfortunate one hundred and sixty-seven men, who are now in prison for signing it, is really extremely mild.

When some one wanted to know what the people thought of Secretary Taft's chumminess with the Czar, he said that Mr. Taft made such a flying visit that the citizens outside the palace did not realize that he was there until he had gone, and that the radical papers had made no noteworthy comment on the episode.

Asked if it were true that the government was seeking his life, he replied that if it was, he did not know it.

"But it isn't true," put in an enthusiastic long-haired individual who sat right back of him, "that the autocracy is keeping constant track of your movements, and that the reason President Roosevelt is not going to attend the banquet given in your honor, or receive you at the White House, is that the Russian Ambassador has informed him that either of these actions on his part would be unfavorably construed by the Czar."

May Not See the President.

Prof. Milyoukov's smile did not fade, but a bewildered expression crept into his alert, blue eyes.

"But I know nothing about who is to be at the banquet," he declared emphatically, "and I had no intention of calling upon the President, so the question as to his willingness or ability to receive me has not arisen."

"Not going to call at the White House," chorused several. "Why not, don't you want to see the President?"

"I have not said that I have decided to avoid the Executive Mansion," replied the tactful one, "I admire the President very much, but I have not attempted to make any formal arrangement for an interview, owing to the shortness of the time at my disposal. I would like to remain longer in America, but I must be back in St. Petersburg before the end of the month in order to be present at the opening of the Duma."

When asked by what means his party hoped to bring about the reforms it deemed necessary, he replied that while specific tactics were always a matter of the expediency of the moment, he advocated only peaceful measures.

MAN BECOMES A SNOWBALL.

Body of Hunter Is Center of Hardened Mass in Avalanche.

Vienna, Jan. 13.—The Deutsches Volkshaus records that a sportsman who was hunting chamois near Uttendorf, loosened the snow on which he was standing by discharging his rifle. Once started, the movement became an avalanche. The hunter was thrown down the side of the mountain, rolling rapidly toward the valley. As he went over and over, snow collected around him, until he became the center of an immense snowball, which ever increased in size until it stopped in the valley.

The man was then so tightly packed in it that it was impossible to extricate him alive. His body was with difficulty hewn out of the hardened mass.

BRAZIL ENTERTAINS OFFICERS OF FLEET

Elaborate Programme at Rio Janeiro Under Way.

PENNA GIVES RECEPTION

The Nations Hailed as "Brothers of the Heart."

Captain Osterhaus Acts in Place of Admiral Evans, Who Suffers from Rheumatism—Brazilian Fleet Brilliantly Illuminated in Honor of Their Visitors—Torpedo Flotilla Is Three Days Behind Time.

Rio de Janeiro, Jan. 13.—The entertainments in honor of the visiting American fleet began to-day, and the official programme promises to test the endurance of the officers, as a function of some sort is provided for every day the fleet remains here. In addition to these official entertainments, there will be others given by private residents who are acquainted with some of the American officers.

This morning Capt. Hugo Osterhaus, commanding the Connecticut, Rear Admiral Evans' flagship, went ashore, and as the representative of Admiral Evans paid his respects to Rear Admiral Alexandrino de Alencar, minister of marine. Admiral Evans was not in condition to make the call personally, as he is suffering with a slight attack of rheumatism in his ankle. Prior to this, the usual formal calls were paid to the commander of the Brazilian fleet in the harbor.

Penna Gives Reception.

President Penna gave a largely attended reception in honor of the Americans at his residence this afternoon. Mr. Irving B. Dudley, the American Minister, presented the officers to the president.

Those present included a large number of government officials, naval and military officers, and the elite of the city. A fine band furnished music, which included the American and Brazilian national hymns. The scene was a very brilliant one.

Minister Dudley gave a dinner at Petropolis this evening. His guests included Rear Admirals Emory, Thomas, and Sperry and the captains of the various war ships.

They went across the bay in President Penna's yacht, and then took a special train that was awaiting them to their destination, which is some twenty miles northeast of the capital.

Mr. Dudley proposed a toast to President Roosevelt and President Penna. Rear Admiral De Alencar responded.

Brothers of the Heart.

President Penna said that Brazil and the United States are "brothers of the heart."

As a matter of courtesy the Brazilian naval authorities have detailed launches from their warships to act as guards for the American vessels.

Last night the Brazilian fleet was brilliantly illuminated in honor of the Americans, and there was a fine display of fireworks ashore. Until a late hour the shore front was thronged by residents, who displayed their cordiality toward the visitors whenever occasion offered.

To-day the enthusiasm continues, and the blue-jackets who were given shore leave have had a strenuous day. The Brazilians are noted for their hospitality, and in accordance with this disposition special committees have been appointed to see that the sailors have a good time when they come ashore.

Dr. Leopold H. Schwenker, surgeon of the torpedo-boat flotilla, will be tried by court-martial on the charge of neglect of duty when the torpedo flotilla arrives here from Pernambuco.

He was ordered to attend a man who was sick on one of the torpedo boats, but instead of going himself he sent an apothecary, it is alleged. The sick man died.

New Cruiser to Join Fleet.

The cruiser South Dakota will be placed in commission on January 27, and will be attached to the second division of the Pacific fleet, in command of Rear Admiral Uriel Sebree.

THEATRICALS FOLLOW DINNER

Huge Ballroom Opened for the First Time in Three Seasons—Arnold Daly and His Company Present "The Van Dyke" and "The Shirkers" in Their Entirety.

New York, Jan. 13.—Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor gave a theatrical entertainment to about 300 of their friends at their home, 840 Fifth avenue, to-night. The theatricals were preceded by a dinner, at which fifty covers were laid.

It was the first time in three seasons that the Astor ballroom, which covers the rear of the residences of Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor and Mr. Astor's mother, at 840 and 842 Fifth avenue, has been opened for two seasons, and since the death of her father, the late Edward S. Willing, has done little entertaining.

The theatrical part of to-night's entertainment was furnished by Arnold Daly and his company. Two one-act plays were given, "The Van Dyke," adapted from the French by Cosmo Gordon Lennox, and "The Shirkers," by C. M. S. McCallan. Both plays were presented just as given earlier in the season at the Berkeley Theater, Holbrook Blinn and Miss Helen Ward supported Mr. Daly in their original roles.

Dinner Precedes Play.

The dinner, which preceded the plays, was served at 8 o'clock at five tables in the dining-room, which is on the sixteenth floor of the house, and opens into the ballroom.

The central table, where Mrs. Astor was seated, was almost covered by a large cluster of mauve orchids to correspond with the color scheme of Mrs. Astor's costume. She wore a mauve velvet dress, with point d'Alencon lace and diamond ornaments. On the four other tables were central mounds of pink roses and lilies of the valley.

The stage in the ballroom was placed on the west, or Fifth avenue side. It was the portable stage which is used at the Waldorf-Astoria, and was loaned for the occasion. The stage was ornamented with masses of pink azaleas and Southern holly.

Among those present at the dinner and entertainment were: Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Goetz, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Mrs. Benjamin Guinness, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. August Belmont, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. John R. Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 13.—In his annual report to the governor, Secretary Joseph Kalbfus, of the State game commission, recommends that Gov. Stuart in his next message to the legislature ask that body for legislation by which the State shall pay a bounty on the scalps of the ordinary house cat.

House cats, says Secretary Kalbfus in supporting his suggestion, are the greatest destroyers of bird life in the world, and he would like to see the cats annihilated, for until that is done the birds are not safe.

DREAMING OF THAT HAPPY LAND.

BLACK HAND FIRES BOMB.

Tenement Destroyed and Family Is Thrown from Beds.

New York, Jan. 14.—Exactly at midnight there was a loud explosion in the cellar under the grocery store of Andra Adquirio, at 416 East Sixty-fourth street. This flooring was not a minute old when two more explosions came, one in the rear of the cellar, under the rooms where Adquirio lives with his mother, his wife, and five children. These persons were thrown out of bed, and their rooms, as well as the grocery store, were wrecked.

The third explosion tore apart the staircase in the front hall. The house is part of a double tenement used by twenty-four families, Italian and Irish.

A fire started in the basement, but the fire department quickly extinguished the flames.

The explosions were put down as the work of members of the Black Hand Society.

JAPANESE VISITS ARSENAL.

Capt. Kono, Military Expert, Sees Manufacture of Rifles.

Springfield, Mass., Jan. 13.—That the war clouds threatening Japan and America are not considered seriously by the War Department at Washington was evinced to-day when Capt. Kono, Japanese military expert, came to this city to study the manufacture of rifles. Capt. Kono had with him a permit from the War Department granted at the request of the Japanese minister to this country.

Stanhope Blunt, commandant at the United States Arsenal, has taken him in charge and is showing him every courtesy. Capt. Kono visited several departments to-day, and the details of the new United States magazine rifle, and the advantages of the pointed bullet were explained to him. He also visited the arsenal, where thousands of rifles are stored for emergency.

Two children were drowned yesterday. A milkman, with his horse and wagon, was washed out to sea at Vedado yesterday afternoon and lost. The sea is now going down.

The dead firemen were buried this afternoon. There was a large funeral procession, and the streets were lined with crowds. The provincial governor, the alcalde, and Gov. Magoon's aid attended.

The departure of the steamer Monterey from Progreso for this port was delayed two days by the storm. The steamer Esperanza, from New York, is expected to arrive to-night, twelve hours overdue.

COURT WILL HEAR THAW TROUBLES

Lawyer Littleton Tells of Insanity Taint.

HIS ADDRESS A SURPRISE

Did Not Expect State to Close Until To-day.

Attorney Defending the Young Man Accused of Murder Declares that Family Pride Prevented the True Facts of the Prisoner's Hereditary Being Brought Out at First Trial. White's Brother-in-law a Witness.

New York, Jan. 13.—The prediction that nothing in the life of Harry K. Thaw or his family would be spared to save him from the electric chair for killing Stanford White was confirmed to-day, when Martin W. Littleton outlined the defense. Thaw was a madman, bereft of all reason when he killed White, is in substance what Mr. Littleton says he will prove.

And to substantiate this defense, he will produce evidence to show that on the paternal and maternal side Thaw had relatives who were insane, at least one of them dying in an asylum; that Thaw was born weak-minded, and that on several occasions he was insane, at least temporarily, and once while suffering from melancholia tried to kill himself.

Briefly, that was the reply of Mr. Littleton to the case of the prosecution, which was presented in four hours. Only four witnesses were brought forth to show, as Assistant District Attorney Garvan announced in the opening of the people's case, that Thaw committed a deliberate, premeditated, and cowardly murder.

The chief witness presented by the prosecution was James Clinch Smith, White's brother-in-law, who did not appear on the direct case at the last trial. His story in the main did not deviate on any vital point from the story he told before, except that Mr. Littleton put him through a much longer cross-examination.

But it did not shake his story; to some it seemed that the more Mr. Littleton questioned him the stronger his story bore out the contention of the prosecution that every act of Thaw's on the roof of the garden the night he killed White was that of a man rational and premeditating murder.

Talked of Brunette.

Mr. Smith described how Thaw came up and spoke to him, how they chatted about Wall street, ocean liners, girls, one a "buxom brunette," mentioned by Thaw, for about a half an hour. He gave a picture of Thaw wandering around the spot garden, with his eye fixed on one spot. Every movement Thaw made Mr. Smith watched, until finally Thaw fired the three shots that killed the architect.

From what he observed that night and the conclusions he made from it Mr. Smith said he knew that Thaw was watching his brother-in-law, although he didn't know who had been killed until an hour or more after he left the garden.

It was a surprise to Mr. Littleton to have to make his opening address to the jury this afternoon. He had expected that District Attorney Jerome would take up all the day with his case, but after one witness had been examined after Mr. Smith, Mr. Jerome said:

"The State rests."

Mr. Littleton got a respite of fifteen minutes to get ready, and then he dug deep into the history of Thaw and his family, saying it wasn't a pleasant task to pull aside the curtain that shut out that family history. He named the relatives of Thaw who were insane or had a mental weakness of one kind or another. There was surely a taint in the Thaw family and Thaw couldn't escape it. The fever that burned in his blood when he was born would burn until he died, was the way Mr. Littleton expressed it. He was an erratic child, subject to convulsions and St. Vitus' dance. When he was six years old he couldn't talk, at least he couldn't talk a language that a school teacher could understand. He went to schools and was wild-eyed and erratic.

"He oscillated between brilliancy and madness since he was a boy," was Mr. Littleton's description.

Will Show Madness.

Witnesses would be brought from London, Paris, and Monte Carlo, to show that Thaw was insane. Mr. Littleton said. This country had been combed for witnesses to bear out the defense, and after hearing Mr. Littleton name the measures that have been taken to build up the defense no one will doubt that a good-sized fortune has been disposed of to save Thaw.

Mr. Littleton's presentation of what he says he will prove, was commented upon favorably, if there was quite a bit of what seemed to be unnecessary oratory thrown in. It took him an hour and a half, and when he got through he was asked how he expected to keep Thaw out of a madhouse if he produced all the evidence he said he would:

"We'll cross that bridge when we come to it," he said.

In his speech to the jury, Mr. Littleton said that he hoped that Mrs. Mary Copley Thaw, Thaw's mother, would be able to be a witness. She was sick with rheumatism and heart trouble, but she was improving and would make every effort to come here from Pittsburgh to aid her son.

One of the explanations made by the Thaw lawyers after the first trial was that Michael Delphin Delmas had not been allowed to make the defense he had planned because of the interference of Mrs. Thaw and her daughter, the Countess of Yarmouth, who did not want to have disclosed to the public the evidences of insanity in the Thaw family. If Mr. Littleton holds to the course he outlined to-day, that is what is to be done.

Thaw Is Nervous.

A few times during Littleton's speech Thaw showed signs of nervousness and excitability. Several times he spoke to Lawyer Peabody, who sat next to him.
